The Money Kings at Play

Russell Sage's hostility to the vacation idea is not shared in Wall street. Henry H. Rogers, for example, is a keen yachtsman. Jacob Schiff and James Speyer believe in taking a trip to Europe every summer. James J. Hill is always host of a large salmon fishing party off the coast of Labrador in July. They go up in his big steam yacht. William Rockefeller, like his brother, John D., is a golfer. George Gould is an outdoor man.

E. H. Harriman has a magnificent estate of 30,000 acres in the Ramapo mountains, where he maintains a large stable. He also owns a yacht, the Sultana. George W. Perkins is keen on motoring, while James McCrea, president of the Pennsylvania, is an enthusiastic cross-country walker. President Baer of the Reading goes in for landscape gardening and President Underwood of the Erie divides his time between motoring and yachting.

Others in the group of big railroad presidents who go in for the outdoor thing in the summer are President Thomas of the Lehigh, President Ripley of the Santa Fe, Oscar Murray of the Baltimore & Ohio and W. H. Newman of the New York Central.

One of the few exceptions to the vacation or outdoor rule is Marvin Huggitt of the Chicago & Northwestern, who has not taken a vacation in fifteen years.
